PREFACE

d up stairs

This work is presented as the result of an earnest and painstaking effort to compile a volume of biographical reference composed of concise life sketches of Tennesseans who are recognized within their respective communities as representative citizens. We first obtained by personal local investigation, from sources we deemed reliable, the names of those who have achieved local recognition for the attainment of the standard required for our publication; in the selection of this list merit and fitness only were considered, and the compilation here presented consists of life sketches based upon personal data supplied by individuals appearing upon the list. We requested this data with the express understanding that the publication of the sketch involved upon the subject no obligation of any nature whatever. We therefore claim for our publication that it is absolutely free from mercenary bias and that no person whose life sketch appears in it, from the highest to the lowest, is justly subject to the suspieion of having in any way paid for such recognition. We make this explanation in justice to ourselves and in fairness to those whose sketches appear in the publication. We do not desire to be recognized as mercenary exploiters of personal vanity, and we wish to repel any suggestion that those who have had the public spirit and the patriotism to co-operate with us in this work have done so with the vaunting purpose of self-advertisement.

In this enterprise we entered a new field, and we were met at the outset with misjudgment, suspicion and distrust. We were in no way responsible for the condition we encountered. We simply had to overcome the obstacles erected by the authors of "write-up" schemes, etc., wherein persons, regardless of their character and ability, have been, for a financial consideration, vaunted before their fellow-citizens in terms of most extravagant compliment and fulsome praise.

Between the covers of this publication will be found concise sketches of many eminent Tennesseans; yet we disclaim that we are herein holding out any one as distinguished or as deserving of a place in history. We have simply gotten together sketches of as many of those as were reported to us, as having achieved local recognition, as we could possibly obtain. We have offered no word of praise; we have simply represented the facts as presented to us, leaving them to bear their own comment. If we have omitted sketches of eminent or representative citizens of any of the many communities of the State, the omission is due to the failure of such citizens to respond to our request for information. If we have failed to offer position to any person entitled to such recognition, the fault should be ascribed to the inadvertence incident to the magnitude of our undertaking.

But we do claim for this work that it contains a greater amount of accurate information concerning a larger number of the foremost citizens of Tennessee than has ever been heretofore accomplished in this, and, we believe, in any other State of the Union.

The magnitude of the merit of such a performance depends upon the personal viewpoint. There are those who are profoundly interested in Tennesseans of the past and of the present, and who appreciate the importance of the preservation of every record, personal as well as public, for the benefit of the future, and there are many men and women of affairs within the State who feel the urgent need of a reliable book of reference dealing briefly and accurately with the biographical history of representative Tennesseans of today; to them we commend our effort with the utmost confidence that it will meet with their unqualified approval

Covering every community in the State, and supplying personal detail concerning a large number of the men of affairs in each community, "Who's Who in Tennessee" will prove of practical utilitarian value to public, professional and business men, and in presenting it to them we are filling a demand which, if not generally realized, is none the less real.

We will refrain from presenting our offering upon the golden service of an apostrophe to Tennessee. It is enough to say that this is a record of Tennesseans of today, who are making Tennessee what it is today, and that the life facts of the very humblest individual among them, are worthy of preservation for the benefit of his family, his friends and his community.
